

Single Blind Peer Review Process

The most common form of peer review for GAP journals is “single-blind”, to make the process as objective as possible. Reviewers are aware of the author’s identity, but the author will not know the identity of the reviewers.

Role of the journal Editor/ Reviewer

The chief editor decides whether the received paper fits the aims and scope of the journal, then select the editors who then review the paper through the set criteria of GAP Journals.

The decision of the Editors/ Reviewer

Editors review the paper and provide the chief editor with detailed and useful comments as per the set guidelines of the review criteria.
